INTERNATIONAL SUMMER SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE DUBROVNIK 2005

FROM 29.TH AUGUST TO 03.RD SEPTEMBER

School is involved in researches of coexistence old and new architecture in the condition of sustainable tourism. Enormous heritage values of Dubrovnik give us a chance to explore past, but also a future. Dubrovnik is an excellent case study.

This workshop titled NAVAL TOWN will try to answer the question of remodulation of a PORT GRUZ in a sense of new demands. Is it possible to imagine and design a part of new town which image will become immortal? Lets try to do it together at international workshop.

NAVAL TOWN - GRAD BRODOVA

NAVAL TOWN

MJ 1:2000

Introduction

Dubrovnik is a globally well-known spot; whose citizens simply call it The Town. Throughout history, as a maritime republic, Dubrovnik had a special character in political, cultural and architectural sense. For a long time, The Town has been independent and self-sufficient, timeless solid and beautiful.

OLD TOWN - STARI GRAD

Historic center

After the fall of Dubrovnik Republic in 1808, the continuity of life influenced urban expansion toward Gruž bay on west side, where a new port had been developed, much bigger than the former inside the town walls. It was a time without proper social vision and The Other Town happened more or less accidentally.

Long ago, the golf of Gruž represented spatial and spiritual counter-balance to The Town inside the walls. It was a scene for idyllic living, an oasis for the enjoyment of life pleasures, Arcadia of the poets, politicians and philosophers. In the gardens of summer villas and on the peaceful sea of Gruž bay some of the most intriguing pages of a remarkable cultural history have been conceived.

Admirable arsenals, porches, terraces, cloisters, pergolas, were built in the continuity since Middle Age, and till today they preserve the memory of a glorious past.

Never falling asleep, Dubrovnik now lives a cosmopolitan life of prime tourist destination. Cruisers from all over the world daily enter the port of Gruž, while the streets are crowded with people proceeding towards its historic center. Dubrovnik is being filled up and emptied in an accelerating rhythm. And even though there is no adequate possibility for further expansion, the town needs to and wants to receive its guests in new structures with improved facilities, decanting in that process a hundreds years of tradition into a fluid of moment which lasts.

The Other Town needs an Image. An architectural workshop, which is not bound with the economical or political realities, needs to offer the best spatial solutions by using hard intellectual work that combines student's talent and tutors experience.

Naval town

The new urban scene on the sea, near the sea, and perhaps under the sea, is symbolically called The Naval City. It is the area of the port of Gruž, marked blue on the map, which needs to satisfy all conditions of naval and inland transport, including other facilities that successively complement them, in order to give The Other Town the similar character and significance as the historic centre. The physiognomy of The Naval City should become a desired destination, an appealing image for all. It would represent the aspirations and culture of the contemporary inhabitants. The guests of The Naval City should therefore find all facilities that would create symbiosis between the town and the port.

- minimum 3 berths for maxi cruisers
- transit berths for different tourist ships
- town port for domestic boats
- reconstruction of existing yacht club marina
- port bank and lungo mare solutions
- passengers terminals
- bus terminal
- port headquarter
- other facilities according to personal decision

No limitations have been set for your designing. In case you consider that the existing buildings couldn't be included into your plan, they can be altered or removed. The aim is to explore what could The Other Town with its Naval City become in the future. We advise you to study different elements of local architectural tradition which surround you in Dubrovnik. We advise you toward a consideration of sustainable environmental concepts where there is place only for timeless values and individual character.
